

I fully agree that broadcasters should refrain from offensive content in their programming, and I'm sure most broadcasters would also agree. Unfortunately, there are some who violate this, and, indeed, they should be penalized. Please keep in mind, however, that the vast majority of broadcasters are very responsible with the content of their programming, and have never used such material.

The action of requiring broadcasters to log their audio for 60 or 90 days would punish most, the people who violate the least -The small market broadcasters.

Such action by the FCC doesn't present much of a burden on larger companies. They'll simply buy the loggers, assign someone to take care of it, and never be bothered with it again.

It's more of a burden to smaller companies who lack the financial and/or staff resources to maintain such a requirement.

Please don't make small market broadcasters pay again, for yet another crime that we didn't commit.

Thank you for your time.
